

Adira's mission is to invest in better lives for people with neurodegenerative diseases.

Neuro Health Equity: Let's Talk

Generously sponsored by uniQure

As part of National Minority Health Month at Adira

You are invited to help advance health equity for people of color impacted by neurodegenerative disease (ND).

Click here to register for this FREE virtual event!

When:

April 15 from 3-5 p.m. ET

What:

A facilitated virtual discussion on equity-advancing needs in the ND community and real-time priority setting for Adira.

Jason Resendez will present a recent report on priorities related to brain health in socially disadvantaged groups.

Followed by a conversation where you are invited to:

- Discuss disparities, inequities
- Identify needs & share successes
- Collaborate in real time with other patients and providers
- Get input on your projects
- Take part in solution design

We welcome:

- People living with Alzheimer's or related dementias, ALS, Huntington's, MS, or Parkinson's
- Their caregivers
- Professionals serving these communities

Featuring special guest Jason Resendez

Executive Director of UsAgainstAlzheimer's Center for Brain Health Equity, and Head of the LatinosAgainstAlzheimer's Coalition

From clinical trial inclusion to paid family leave for dementia caregivers, Jason champions brain health equity at every level of the healthcare system. In 2020, he was recognized as one of America's top 20 "Influencers in Aging" by PBS Next Avenue. Jason graduated from Georgetown University, is a Google Next Generation Policy Leader and an Aspen Ideas Health Fellow.

“ Stigma, misunderstanding, and weak linkages to our nation's healthcare system are leading to significant disparities in Alzheimer's and dementia diagnosis rates, access to treatment, quality care, and clinical research and trial participation among Latinos and African Americans. ”

UsAgainstAlzheimer's